Linux study notes

Linux is an operating system.

The kernel manages processes, memory and devices.

A directory contains files and other directories.

The pwd command prints the current directory.

The ls command lists directory contents.

The cd command changes the current directory.

File permissions control read, write and execute access.

The chmod command changes file permissions.